Courtesy on roads, walks to save money

GREG HARRIS
Of The News

It's going to cost you more to disrupt funeral processions, drive over fire hoses, and ride your bike on the sidewalk.

BUSS

City Council has passed a new traffic bylaw which has a revised schedule of fines for a variety of roadway transgressions aimed at both the inconsiderate motorist and the discourteous pedestrian.

The proper way to use the sidewalk is outlined as follows: "A pedestrian shall walk to the right of the centre line of crosswalk or sidewalk when another pedestrian is approaching from the opposite direction unless it is impractical to do so."

Failing to comply could cost you $10.

And driving over a fire hose could cost you $200, and breaking into the ranks of a funeral or military procession could cost you $40.

Ald. Wayne Buss, particularly concerned with youngsters using the sidewalks for riding and parking, sparked most of the debate on the bylaw by arguing for stiffer fines for bicycle infractions.

"Kids have to be responsible," Buss said in moving an amendment which would have increased the proposed $2 fines for parking on the sidewalk and riding on the sidewalk to $20 and $40 respectively.

"Two dollars just isn't going to mean anything," and stiffer penalties for youngsters would set a "meaningful example" to the community, he said.

City solicitor Frank O'Connell commented that he would hate to see his child fined those amounts for the infractions, mostly because the money would end up coming out of his pocket instead of the child's.

Councillors voted to leave the proposed $2 fine for parking a bicycle on the sidewalk the way it was, but compromised by upping the penalty for riding on the sidewalk to $10.

Mayor Ted Grimm argued against Buss's amendment saying $20 was a punitive amount, and Ald. Ken Sauer pointed out the size of the fines had to be kept in perspective with one another.

Ald. Karen Green, concerned with the proposed river-valley trails system, wondered if outlawing bicycles on sidewalks would extend to all portions of the trails system.

Mayor Ted Grimm noted that amendments could be made to the bylaw once the trails system was completed and appropriate areas were designated for bicycle use.

Steve Chandler, the owner of missing python Cheyenne, handles a five-year-old yellow Rat Snake. Chandler says he is concerned for the safety of his python, missing since last weekend, because he has heard reports of people saying they plan to kill the 2.5-metre reptile. — News photo Robin Schlaht

Slippery serpent leaves only trail of uncertainty

Aug 22 - 1985

GREG HARRIS
Of The News

Cheyenne, the fugitive python on the slither from the law, remains at large somewhere in Medicine Hat. Her owner, Steve Chandler, is concerned for her safety and confused by the law.

"Right now I'm just worried about the snake's welfare," Chandler says.

"I've heard people say they're going to find it and kill it — that's why I want to stress that there's a reward for her," he says, declining to say what the amount is.

Cheyenne, who measures close to 2.5 metres (eight feet) long, went missing sometime last weekend from her home in the northeast Crescent Heights area.

"I don't see why it's illegal to keep it," Chandler says of the legislation requiring python owners to obtain a permit from the office of Don Sparrow, associate minister of public lands and wildlife in the department of Energy and Natural Resources.

"I could understand if it was a cougar or a bear or a rattlesnake or something, but it's not dangerous," he says.

Chandler says he has been keeping a variety of snakes, as well as an assortment of other pets, for more than 10 years, and has never had any of them escape.

He acquired Cheyenne, 4½-years-old, last spring for $300 when a friend could no longer afford to keep her.

Greg Smith, an Alberta Fish and Wildlife officer for Medicine Hat, would not comment on whether Chandler would be charged under the Fish and Wildlife Act, or if Cheyenne would be confiscated and donated to a zoo.

"We're not really sure ourselves . . . first of all we have to find it," he says, "and then we'll be in touch with Edmonton."

"It's something that hasn't been decided, and won't be until such time."

Rick Servetnyk, a Calgary-based Fish and Wildlife officer with the Enforcement Field Services Branch, says legislation pertaining to exotic animals will soon be changed, and under the draft regulations, python owners won't require a permit from the department of Fish and Wildlife, though other government agencies might introduce their own permit requirements.

"Right now we're dealing with an area that's kind of a grey zone," Servetnyk says.

"There's so many snakes and things being kept in captivity, that unless they're being mistreated or are causing personal or property damage . . . we're not actually enforcing the laws on possession for it."

Servetnyk compares the present permit situation for exotic animals to an imaginary change in speed limits — if they were to be increased tommorow, they would not be as rigorously enforced today.

Servetnyk adds that Chandler's python has probably already cleared a set of regulatory hurdles simply by virtue of being in the country.

He says the International Convention on Trade in Endangered Species requires complex permits for both import and export of each exotic animal.

Shy snake still slipping searchers

The city-wide serpent search for Cheyenne, the missing python, enters its second week with no solid clues to the elusive snake's whereabouts.

Owner Steve Chandler says he is continuing to search during the afternoons when moderate temperatures would be most likely to bring Cheyenne out of hiding.

"I haven't turned up anything yet," Chandler says, adding he is not about to give up the hunt for his prize 2.4-metre (eight-foot) long reptile.

"A guy phoned me, who is also interested in snakes, and said he was looking for it down by the river, which is really helpful," Chandler says.

The 22-year-old also received a call during the weekend from a woman west of Redcliff who claimed she had the python in a barrel.

"I went out there to take a look, but it was just a bull snake. She asked me how big Cheyenne was and I said, 'about five times the size'."

The Medicine Hat Fish and Wildlife office says the python's disappearance is still being investigated.

Cheyenne, a 4½-year-old non-poisonous constrictor, escaped from her home at 572 - 7th St. N.E. sometime between Saturday, Aug. 17, and Sunday, Aug. 18.

Anyone finding the yellow and brown snake should contact the Fish and Wildlife office, or city police.

Chandler says there is a reward for Cheyenne's safe return.

Six injured as buildings explode, burn

MARCH 14 1985

At least six people were injured about 12:50 p.m. today as the Hy-Point Feeds Ltd. plant exploded and fire spread to the Alberta Linseed Oil plant, at 901 Allowance Ave. S.E.

Police and fire officials were at the scene trying to keep the fire, which covered an area the size of a city block, from spreading.

The six were taken to hospital. One was "seriously injured and three others were in serious condition," said Leo Hill, administrator of Medicine Hat and District Hospital. Two others were described as "walking injured".

Parts of the building collapsed and flames as high as 60 metres shot into the air while the rest of the structure burned.

The fire had spread to about a third of the Alberta Linseed Oil plant by 1:30, but after that, firefighters appeared to be making headway in containing the blaze.

Soon after the fire started, people gathered on the crest of Scholten Hill to watch.

Police started cordoning off the area at 1:15 and electric workers were cutting power at the area.

"The top blev off the building and then there was smoke and then the flames started," said Joanne Shepard. "It was really loud."

Jim Wooding, from the nearby Cablevision building said: "The satellite dishes are getting so hot the white paint was starting to turn brown.

"The machinery is out and all 14 employees have been evacuated. If we can stop the fire from spreading over the linseed plant, we hope to be back on the air in five hours, but if it blows we will lose our building too."

Firefighters were watering down houses on Foundry Street S.E., across from the linseed plant, for fear flames might spread across the street.

Police blocked off traffic on Allowance Avenue and the other streets adjacent to the plant.

Residents find nature's snowballs

Feb. 16-1985

GRANDE PRAIRIE, Alta. (CP) — Children in this northwestern Alberta city woke up in a snowball-littered paradise Friday.

"There were millions of them just rolling all over the place," said weather technician Ken Haley. Feb. 16-1985

A combination of high winds and wet snow created snowballs — some as large as volleyballs — that were scattered on driveways, fields and lawns. Winds up to 120 kilometres an hour rolled small grains of snow across the snow-covered landscape and they grew larger as they rolled.

Snow-rollers a rare natural phenomenon and elderly callers to a Grande Prairie newspaper Friday could not remember seeing it before. However, two winters ago, some were found in Wembley, a small community near Grande Prairie.

Air-traffic controller John Burns was on duty Thursday night when blue-green lightning lit up the sky and the fierce storm began.

The freak winter storm was the result of a "very unstable" moist upper trough combined with a warm air front, said Haley. Between 10 p.m. and 11 p.m., the temperature rose from -10 C to plus four.

High winds broke the February record for Grande Prairie of 105 kilometres an hour.

"It was a 20 to 25-minute storm with high winds and it rained," said RCMP Const. Les Kjemhus. "We had no serious problems, no injuries, just several smashed windows."

Power in the tiny community of Hythe, 50 kilometres north of Grande Prairie, went out at about 9:30 p.m. when some power poles blew over, but was restored by midnight.

Woman given jail terms

A 30-year-old Medicine Hat woman was sentenced to 60 days in jail Wednesday for forgery and false pretences by issuing a worthless cheque.

Beverley Ethel Van Riper, 45 Collins Cres. S.E., pleaded guilty to forging the name of her employer on a cheque for $5,851 and writing a worthless cheque for $60.

Court was told at her trial earlier that Van Riper, while an employee of Canadian Dressed Meats (Alberta) Ltd., wrote a series of cheques using the names of fictitious employees.

The company closed its Medicine Hat operations in 1978 but one year later the false cheques were discovered.

Court was told a civil settlement was reached between Canadian Dressed Meats Ltd. and Van Riper to the value of $5,851. But on Feb. 8 Van Riper forged a cheque to pay the settlement by using the name of her new employer at Mid-Way Tire and Retreading Ltd. in Redcliff.

Crown prosecutor David Carter told court that Van Riper also wrote a worthless cheque for $60 in April in exchange for cash from Mid-Way Tire and Retreading Ltd.

In passing sentence Judge Philip Wambolt noted the serious nature of the charge.

"It is an extremely serious offence, a breach of trust. It is a sentence that almost automatically calls for a period of incarceration. It must be made plain to all that if you are in a position of trust and abuse that trust . . . you must suffer the consequences and those consequences must be severe."

Noting Van Riper's apology to the court, her five weeks in custody and the effect on her children and family Judge Wambolt added "I think that rehabilitation is very important . . . and I believe Mrs. Van Riper has a great possibility of rehabilitation."

Wambolt sentenced Van Riper to 60 days in jail on the forgery charge. The sentence will be served intermittently from 9 p.m. to 6 a.m. each day.

Van Riper also received 30 days in jail for false pretences by issuing a worthless cheque.

In addition she received two years probation and was ordered to provide 100 hours of community service work to be completed by Feb. 27, 1981 and refrain from the use of alcohol.

The jail terms will be served concurrently.

MARRIAGES

Iona & the late Lyle Hotel of Medicine Hat are pleased to announce the marriage of their only daughter Neva Marquerite to Douglas Ward Shepherd, son of Shirley Hope & Lynn Shepherd of Calgary. The Wedding took place in Las Vegas, Nevada on Nov. 27/87. The couple are residing in Calgary.

Fonyo misses court

Feb. 14 1986

A bench warrant was issued for Steve Fonyo's arrest after the one-legged runner failed to appear in Medicine Hat provincial court Thursday.

FONYO

Judge Philip Wambolt's docket included an unpaid $30 speeding ticket made out to Steve Fonyo.

The defendant was stopped by RCMP on the Trans-Canada Highway near Canadian Forces Base Suffield Jan. 11, senior Crown prosecutor Darwin Greaves said.

Fonyo spent Thursday in Toronto, where he was the guest of honor at a Great Valentine Gala dinner that helped raise money for disabled adults. The dinner capped Steve Fonyo Day in the Ontario city.

The Vernon, B.C. native became a national celebrity last year during his Journey for Lives cross-country run which raised millions of dollars for cancer research.

Fonyo now lives in Calgary where he is learning to fly.

Over the limit

Feb 18/1987

A Walsh resident was fined $600 and prohibited from driving for six months after being found guilty of driving with a blood alcohol level exceeding .08.

Jewlie Noble, 45, was arrested by Medicine Hat RCMP at Dunmore in the early morning hours of Jan. 11.

Court was told a westbound marked police cruiser clocked Noble's eastbound Ford at 125 km-h in a 100 km-h zone as it travelled along the Trans-Canada Highway shortly after 12 a.m.

Upon stopping the car police suspected Noble had been drinking and ordered her to provide samples of her breath.

Her readings were .15 and .16.

Hot water

Dec. 20/86

Judge Philip Wambolt also ordered a probation period of 18 months for Clark, 47.

The offence occurred Nov. 21 at the couple's farm about 32 kilometres from the city, court was told.

During an argument Clark threw some hot water at his wife.

She ran to a neighbor's house for help, getting frostbite in the process.

She was in hospital for both the burns and the frostbite and has since made a complete recovery, court learned.

Senior prosecutor Darwin Greaves said the couple have a "long history of acrimony".

Defence lawyer David Carter said the couple have been married 28 years and plan to take part in joint marital counselling. Clark has an excellent job and no criminal record, court learned.

Syndrome claims 10-year-old

Cook meat well: MDs

A 10-year-old Medicine Hat boy recently died of a disease which has been linked to the consumption of raw or undercooked hamburger and doctors warn parents to ensure that the meat their children eat is well cooked.

The boy, who was briefly treated at Medicine Hat and District Hospital before being flown to Alberta Children's Hospital in Calgary, died of hemolytic uremic syndrome, says Dr. Gerald Vaz, the Medicine Hat attending consultant on the case.

The boy had eaten a hamburger at a city fast-food restaurant before getting sick.

"In no way did he have any food poisoning," said Vaz, who added the syndrome "follows a flu-like illness or viral infection."

Symptoms include vomiting, paleness, lack of urine, and occasional seizures.

Calgary children's kidney specialist, Dr. Lane Robson, treated the boy and is researching the cause of the disease which remains unknown.

He said hemolytic uremic syndrome — which can kill through kidney failure and associated complications such as high blood pressure, hypertension, fluid retention and swelling of the brain — is "triggered" by a specific strain (0157H7) of E. coli bacteria which grows in the intestinal tract of some people, usually the very young and old.

"The reason some people get it and others don't we don't know," said Robson.

However, he noted most of the children he has treated with the disease had recently eaten hamburger at fast-food restaurants, picnics or barbecues.

"Generally it is a disease we see every spring and summer and we see about eight cases each year in Southern Alberta."

Robson said there has never been a link established in Canada between hemolytic uremic syndrome and hamburger consumption.

"That doesn't mean the link doesn't exist," he said, noting a 1982 U.S. study conducted in Michigan and Oregon (published March 24, 1983 in the New England Journal of Medicine which documents two outbreaks of the disease among 47 people) which did establish a direct connection between raw or undercooked hamburger and the E. coli bacteria in some fast food restaurants.

However, attempts by Calgary Health Services investigators to discover the same link have proven inconclusive, he said.

"They have not been able to establish a link between E. coli and uncooked meat at any fast food restaurants . . . but it still makes us suspicious and concerned."

The Calgary medical officer of health agreed.

"It's very inconclusive," Dr. Gerald Bonham said. "We sampled a lot of hamburgers in fast food places and couldn't find any E. coli anywhere."

However, Bonham and his staff did find grills at some establishments with certain areas on their cooking surfaces which were too cool to properly cook hamburgers, he said.

They were told to correct the problem.

A recent Calgary Health Services study of 32 people with the disease also provided no new insights into the problem, he said.

Although some of those stricken with hemolytic uremic syndrome had eaten hamburger before the onset of the disease others had not, he said.

"There certainly is a suggestion, overall, that hamburger is in their food history but we know there are gangs of other possibilities."

"Hamburger is still probably one of the more common origins of the disease but it is certainly not exclusive . . . we believe it is part of the problem but it doesn't explain it all. We're really dealing with a lot of unknowns."

Still, both Bonham and Robson suggest parents ensure all hamburger eaten by their children is well cooked.

During the chase, Lehman drove through a red light at the intersection of 13th Avenue S.E. and the Trans-Canada Highway at more than 100 km-h, Cocks said.

Rowe helped handicapped

FEBRUARY 12-1988

A heart attack has claimed the life of Mildred Rowe who will best be remembered for her efforts in making the city accessible to the handicapped.

Rowe, 64, who died Wednesday at the Medicine Hat Regional Hospital, was the "spark plug" who instigated handi-buses, wheelchair curb ramps and the Redi Group Home, Gordon Drybrough, Redi Enterprises executive director said Thursday.

Her funeral will be held at Pattison Funeral Home at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Most recently, Rowe had been lobbying City Hall for a larger residential and medical facility for handicapped adults, said Linda Clark, Redi Group Home manager.

"She was very stubborn and courageous," said Clark, a 20-year acquaintance. "She was respected."

When diagnosed with muscular dystrophy 30 years ago and eventually confined to wheelchair, Rowe "found new challenges . . . Nothing stopped her," said Drybrough.

Bill Wyse, co-ordinator of senior citizens' City services, said Rowe was one of the original people who initiated special transit. Before her 1986 retirement, Rowe spent 11 years working in "every nook and cranny" at Redi Enterprises, added Drybrough.

"Always out to help people in need," she involved herself in the Handicapped Action Group - known also as Wheelchair Action Group - in 1972 and 1973, Wyse said.

In addition to working with that group, she went on air for the 1987 Jerry Lewis Telethon.

Viewers saw "how vibrant and alive . . . how useful she was, and those phones started ringing," said Roger Johnson, who worked with her during the event.

In her 22 hours on the air, donations jumped from $15,000 to $25,000, Johnson said.

"She had more bloody strength than you and me put together."

Born in Vidora, Sask. on Feb. 12, 1923, Rowe moved to Redcliff before coming to Medicine Hat in 1975.

She is survived by her daughter, Fay Svederus, her son, Raymond Rowe, and five grandchildren.

Artist, trustee dies

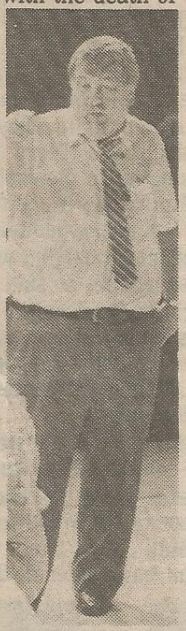
A long career devoted to the education of children in the city's separate school system ended quietly late Monday afternoon with the death of John Komanchuk.



KOMANCHUK

The 58-year-old Komanchuk, died in the intensive care unit of Edmonton's Royal Alexandra General Hospital after suffering a heart attack in his hotel room early Sunday morning.

He was in Edmonton attending the annual convention of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees Association and was preparing for Monday's start to the Alberta School Trustees annual convention at the time of his death.

After 35 years of service as a teacher, principal and administrator in the separate school system, Komanchuk was just beginning his first term as a school board trustee after placing second in the overall balloting in the Oct. 20 municipal elections.

In 1983 Komanchuk sought a seat on City Council. He missed election by a 56-vote margin to former Ald. Sam Stone.

A familar face in both the city's educational and artistic communities, Komanchuk's sudden death has left his school board colleagues reeling.

"We're all just stunned at the news, I just can't believe it," Valerie Neigum, vice-chairman of the board, said Monday night.

Patrick Glashan, Director of Education for the Catholic Board of Education, said Komanchuk's death "is a great loss" and called his 35 years of service to one school district "a real rarity."

A graduate of the University of Alberta, Komanchuk began his education career at St. Louis School as a teacher in 1949-50.

He later became district director of physical education and assumed the part-time duties of director of elementary education and assistant superintendent for school division No. 4 before becoming superintendent of the Catholic Board of Education between 1967-71.

He then took on another school assignment — serving as principal at St. Francis Xavier School until his retirement in 1984.

Throughout his career he held many varied postions with the Alberta Teachers Association.

A prominent figure in Medicine Hat's arts community Komanchuk directed several musicals for Medicine Hat Musical Theatre. The last was The King and I in 1986.

"He was a very talented individual," Ron Miller said this morning. Miller has worked with Komanchuk on many plays.

Adele Armstrong worked as musical director frequently when Komanchuk was stage director for a musical.

"A lot of people saw John the humorist, John the clown, John the manipulator, but they didn't see the sensitive John. When someone said they liked his play, he lit up like a little boy," she said.

"He had only one idea — to bring out the best in people."
